Albert Gulliver Albert Gulliver is an American screenwriter, director, and film historian. He has written and directed several horror films, including the films Pulp Fiction, I Know What You Did Last Summer, and the Showtime original film Waking the Dead. He also published a book on the American Horror Film. Early life and education Gulliver was born and raised in Toledo, Ohio. He was a pre-med student at the University of Michigan, however, he dropped out of school to begin working as an editorial assistant for William Heinemann, an American publisher of pulp fiction novels and comic books. The book Gulliver selected to edit was The Classic American Horrors, a collection of horror tales by H. P. Lovecraft. As a result of Gulliver editing the book, he gained a passion for the genre, and began contributing horror stories to the same anthology. Gulliver later began writing and directing short films as a way to tell more graphic horror stories, before finally turning his focus towards writing and directing feature-length films. Career His first feature-length film was 1994's Pulp Fiction, which was released in cinemas in the United States on November 1, 1994. The film received positive reviews from the critics, however, due to its dark and violent nature, the R-rated film was initially censored by most of the film distributors in the United States. The film went on to become an independent success, and was awarded a place in the American Film Institute's "100 Years...100 Thrills", and the Writers Guild of America's "100 Years...100 Thrills". Gulliver later published a book on the feature film, titled The Movies Of Quentin Tarantino, which was also named one of the best books on the film at the New York Public Library in 1997. Gulliver wrote and directed the film I Know What You Did Last Summer (1997), based on the short story by Richard Matheson titled "Dressing Up for the Day after the Morning After". The film received a positive response from the critics, and went on to become a popular cult classic. The film also won Best Horror/Thriller Film at the 1998 Brussels International Fantastic Film Festival, and was nominated for the same award at the 1998 Academy Awards. The film also appeared on Showtime's 'Waking the Dead' season 2 in 2003. Gulliver's next film was the horror/thriller film Freak (
