The estate-agents trade is sending its first message on housing in many years, and one of the many messages it sends is that, on the matter of dealing with people who think they're getting a bargain, brokers' opinions must be respected. In the past fortnight, there have been two revolts – the first by a disgruntled landlord in London and the second by a wily Hong Kong broker unhappy at prices he feels are too low. If only he had been more flexible in the past decade, he might have found a compromise price he could have been satisfied with. An email I received not long ago from someone who has made an offer on a property was typical. “I am very frustrated with the process,” he wrote. “
