Nexo-POS is an open source Point of Sale system written in PHP that offers you an easy to use and very Q: JavaScript behaving differently in IE vs Chrome I want to add document.onmousemove to a function so that I can detect mouse movements. I am using jQuery as well so that my script will work in IE as well as Chrome. I created a fiddle to demonstrate the issue: var myElement = document.getElementById('foo'); myElement.addEventListener('mousemove', function (e) { // Do something }, false); In Chrome, the event handler works fine. In IE, it just shows the cursor and the event handler never gets called. Why is this happening and how can I fix it? A: As it turns out, jQuery will automatically invoke the EventListener if it detects that the event occurred while the browser was inactive. I guess this is a feature and not a bug. I won't answer my own question because I just found the answer myself. Candida albicans is a medically important opportunistic fungal pathogen in humans. It is well established that animals can be severely affected by systemic infections by this fungus and that such infections can be facilitated by the presence of a compromised immune system. Extensive research has been conducted to identify virulence factors associated with C. albicans, and the number of such factors now known is continuously increasing. An example of this is the ability of C. albicans to switch its morphology to a hyphal form, which plays a crucial role in the pathogenesis of invasive C. albicans infections. The regulation of morphogenesis is still poorly understood, and new determinants are constantly being discovered. The objective of this proposal is to determine whether the myosin-cross-linking protein Thg1p is important for the maintenance of C. albicans hyphal morphology and pathogenesis. We will accomplish this goal by characterizing the phenotypic consequences of thg1p null mutations in vitro and in vivo and by examining the requirement for thg1p in the virulence of C. albicans. The availability of a thg1 null strain makes possible the unprecedented genetic analysis of this protein and an examination of its role in C. albicans morphology and pathogenesis.
